Customer Case Study Edinburgh Park, Scotland

Scotland's most prestigious business parks and recognised as one of the top in Europe, Edinburgh Park is home to more than 25 of the largest blue chip companies in the UK (including BT, Oracle and Fujitsu). The business complex is on the outskirts of Edinburgh and covers 58 acres of land.

A short distance from the city centre and the numerous transport links surrounding the park makes Edinburgh Park an ideal location. However before long, the park was being used by motorists and commuters as a short cut from the main ring-road to the city centre. This caused heavy traffic, noise distractions, pollution and a lack of safety.

Nortech delivered a solution called HYPERX. Each HYPERX reader was placed at the entry and exit points and each employee of each company was given a tag to place in the windscreen of their car. This meant only authorised vehicles were able to access the business park and therefore unauthorised vehicles were unable take the short-cut.

The system is managed through a single PC using APACS software. Each of the 2,500 cars is recorded as it enters and exits the site. This also acts as a safety feature, knowing exactly which vehicles are on site at any one time.

Bus lane control, motorcycle access and keypad access for short term visitors has now been incorporated for a truly multi-user system.

Nortech Control Systems is at the forefront of the Vehicle and Personnel Access Control industry.

For over 15 years the company has specialised in the design, manufacture, and supply of Access Control systems and believes the roots of its success lie in the strong relationships it has built and maintained with its customers and partners.

The combination of Nortech's innovative range of products and highly trained staff mean customers can put their minds at rest when it comes to security.
